

6-1-2015

Alumna's Dedication to Nursing Spans 50 Years

Follow this and additional works at: <http://via.library.depaul.edu/depaul-magazine>

Part of the Geriatric Nursing Commons, and the Nursing Administration Commons

Recommended Citation

(2015) "Alumna's Dedication to Nursing Spans 50 Years," DePaul Magazine: Vol. 1: Iss. 22015, Article 8.
Available at: <http://via.library.depaul.edu/depaul-magazine/vol1/iss22015/8>

This DePaul News is brought to you for free and open access by the Alumni Publications at Via Sapientiae. It has been accepted for inclusion in DePaul Magazine by an authorized administrator of Via Sapientiae. For more information, please contact mbernal2@depaul.edu, MHESS8@depaul.edu.

Alumna's Dedication to Nursing Spans 50 Years

By Melissa Smith

When the FBI cracked down on health care fraud in February 2014, executing the biggest takedown in Washington, D.C.'s history by closing 10 agencies and arresting more than 20 people, patients needed somewhere to go and fast. With no time to ramp up staffing, it was all hands on deck at Professional Healthcare Resources, a home health care, hospice and personal care services organization in Washington, D.C., that was one of a handful of agencies preapproved to take affected patients. Founder and President Eileen DeCesare (LAS MS '78), at age 73, left her office and eagerly jumped back into the field. "Here I was, my lab coat on, my stethoscope in my bag, and I went out visiting," she laughs. "I'm really dedicated to the patients and to the nurses. I'm always ready to roll up my sleeves and help."

2014 marked the 20th anniversary of Professional Healthcare Resources, a goal DeCesare realized while receiving treatment for breast cancer. "That was what saved my life," she asserts. "There was no time to say, 'Pity me, I have breast cancer.' I was going, going, going." Now, Professional Healthcare Resources has seven offices in Maryland, Virginia and Washington, D.C., and more than 700 employees, but DeCesare first came to the United States from the Philippines after being recruited by Cook County Hospital (now John H. Stroger Jr. Hospital of Cook County) during a nursing shortage in the 1960s.

She spent 14 years there, serving as head nurse of the pediatric unit and chairperson for quality assurance for the entire hospital while taking weekend classes at DePaul before leaving for Howard University Hospital in Washington, D.C., to become assistant director of nursing in 1978. DeCesare eventually joined District of Columbia General Hospital, serving as deputy director of nursing and, later, director of nursing systems. After 11 years in that position, she started what would become Professional Healthcare Resources.

"I really think it was my degree from DePaul that opened doors for me," she stresses. "When I was working for hospitals, they were public hospitals. Everything that I learned in public administration I have applied everywhere that I have worked, and I'm still applying it now with my company." DeCesare was drawn to DePaul by its Catholic values. "I don't think I would have accomplished everything that I have without that degree," she says. "That's how important it was to me." The Vincentian mission inspires DeCesare to serve others. "The focus of all the work that we're doing is for the patients," she says. "As long as you keep the patients front and center, you'll never go wrong because your heart is in helping others."

Over the years, DeCesare has lived this mantra countless times. She raised $50,000 to build the Mrs. Philippines Home for Senior Citizens in Oxon Hill, Md., which provides independent housing for 73 low-income seniors, with four units designated for those with disabilities. She serves as president of the Professional Healthcare Hospice Foundation, a nonprofit organization that provides financial support to hospice patients. On

"As long as you keep the patients front and center, you'll never go wrong because your heart is in helping others."

—Eileen DeCesare, founder and president,
Professional Healthcare Resources

Thanksgiving each year, DeCesare identifies which patients live alone and works with her staff to deliver home-cooked meals to the patients and their caretakers. "These are the kinds of things that keep me going and keep me grounded," she explains.

While she names her children as her greatest accomplishment, DeCesare remains humbled by, yet immensely proud of, her success. "I was able to achieve my dream of providing better quality care to our patients," she says. "I feel very proud. I'd like to leave a legacy of true commitment and devotion to our patients." After more than half a century as a nurse, DeCesare shows no signs of slowing down. "I love nursing," she enthuses. "You must have passion for what you're doing, and that's what I have. I love taking care of people!"