Closing Remarks*

*Professor Steven H. Resnicoff***

MR. RESNICOFF: Those of you who know me, appreciate how I reluctantly relinquish the podium. Nevertheless, I have only three things to say. First, I want to congratulate Wei Lee, the editor of this symposium, as well as all the members of the editorial board and staff of the DePaul Business and Commercial Law Journal for this wonderful symposium.

Second, I want to express my thanks, my own thanks and those of the entire DePaul College of Law: thanks to all of the symposium sponsors, whose names appear on the back of the brochure that you received, as well as thanks to all the panelists for their superb presentations that have awakened us to, and enlightened us about, the exciting issues they addressed.

And, third, I want to let everybody - panelists and nonpanelists, those of you who are already a part of the DePaul community and those of you who are just making your first visit to DePaul - know how much we appreciate that you came to share and enjoy this program with us today and how much we hope that you will come and join us again to enhance and enrich all of our intellectual exchanges. Thank you so much for coming.
